

---

Our Contributors

Nichole Bennett is a doctoral candidate in sociology at the University of California, Davis. She is committed to using internships and other experiential learning techniques to connect students to social justice movements, having extensive experience working with college interns as a former instructor at the UC Davis Washington Center and as the current director of the National Council of Women's Organizations' New Faces, More Voices leadership training institute.

Millie Jackson is an associate librarian at Grand Valley State University, Allendale, Michigan. She earned her PhD in English from Michigan State University in 1998. Her dissertation on ladies' library associations in Michigan was awarded the Phyllis Dain Library History Award by the American Library Association.

Loretta Kensinger is an assistant professor of women's studies at California State University, Fresno. She specializes in feminist political theory and US Political Science. Her research explores the boundaries and exclusions in traditional categories of feminist thought, cross-cultural solidarity among women, and the women's movement in the United States. She is currently engaged in a project looking at the feminist theory of Emma Goldman.

Sherryl Kleinman is professor of sociology at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. She is the author of Equals Before God: Seminarians as Humanistic Professionals (U of Chicago P, 1984), Opposing Ambitions: Gender and Identity in an Alternative Organization (U of Chicago P, 1996) and co-author (with Martha A. Copp) of Emotions and Fieldwork (Sage, 1993). Matt Ezzell received his BA in women's studies and creative writing from the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, in 1999. He was the Community Education Coordinator at the Orange County Rape Crisis Center for three years and is currently a graduate student in sociology at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Catherine Marshall is professor of educational administration at The University of North Carolina. She has published extensively about politics of education, qualitative methodology, women's access to careers in educational leadership. Her publications include Feminist Critical Policy Analysis, and Designing Qualitative Research. She directs "Leadership for Social Justice" and is vice president of AERA Division L, Politics and Policy.

Nancy Naples is associate professor of sociology and women's studies at the University of Connecticut. She is author of Grassroots Warriors: Activism Mothering, Community Work, and the War on Poverty and editor of Community Activism and Feminist Politics (Routledge, 1998). She is also co-editor (with Manisha Desai) of Women's Activism and Globalization (Routledge, 2002). Karen Bojar is professor of English and women's studies at Community College of Philadelphia where she has taught for the past 25 years. She is co-editor (with Nancy Naples) of Teaching Feminist Activism (Routledge 2002). She is president of the Philadelphia NOW Political Action committee, and board member of the Pennsylvania NOW-PAC and NARAL-PA Foundation.

---

Melissa Peet is a doctoral student in higher education and does research in women's studies and social work at the University of Michigan. Her scholarly work focuses on the development of critical consciousness as well as multicultural and team-based learning in higher education. She is currently working on developing methods for evaluating individual, group, and organizational changes that support the development of critical consciousness in professional schools. Beth Glover Reed is a community/clinical psychologist with a joint appointment in women's studies and social work at the University of Michigan. Her scholarly work focuses on how social systems either recreate patterns of inequality or can be arenas for change towards social justice goals. One arena of this work is alcohol, tobacco, and other drugs and women, and Reed is currently studying the effects of a federal effort to increase gender sensitive services.

Kimala Price is a doctoral candidate in political science at the University of Michigan. Her dissertation is a narrative analysis of the political discourse on mifepristone (RU-486) and emergency contraception. She has taught courses in political science and women studies, and prior to her graduate studies, she worked for a number of feminist organizations, including the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League (NARAL) and Catholics for a Free Choice.

Karen W. Tice is an associate professor at the University of Kentucky where she teaches courses in education and women's studies. Her research has explored the interplay of gender, region (Appalachia), class, and professionalization processes within women's activism. Her writings include Tales of Wayward Girls and Immoral Women: Case Records and the Professionalization of Social Work.