“Women’s Studies Hunted for Liberal Bias”

Women’s eNews of August 30, 2005, contains an article titled “Women’s Studies Hunted for Liberal Bias,” written by Rachel Corbett. The article discusses the growing (continuing?) pressure being placed on women’s studies, as well as other interdisciplinary programs, by people seeking to promote “intellectual diversity” in colleges and universities. As the article notes, “Women’s studies departments face growing pressure as school starts this year. A legal push by conservative students against what they see as liberal bias takes particular aim at these programs.” See our Teaching Resources page for more information about Women’s eNews.

Doctoral Program in Gender Studies

Indiana University, Bloomington, has announced its new Ph.D. program in Gender Studies. Their publicity cites the new program as “The first and only doctorate in the nation specifically in gender studies.” For information about the program, visit www.indiana.edu/~gender.
